SECOND ANNUAL EASTER SALE

Some people have an idea when they pass our store that it is a small store with a small stock, etc., etc. A mistake. Here is one of Honolulu's brightest, up-to-date stores with one of the largest stocks of goods in the city. We're not so old, but it isn't always age that counts. It's push and energy. As a proof of our success we point with just pride to the daily increasing number of ladies who entrust their business to us.

George Washington is said to have once thrown a dollar across the Potomac River. This is a long way for a dollar to go, but it isn't a circumstance to how far a dollar will go here this week in this great Easter Sale of ours.

Bishop Clark, of Rhode Island, who is also presiding Bishop in the United States, has written the following notice: "At the recent consecration of the Bishop Coadjutor of the Bishop of Fond du Lac was held under the authority of the commission signed and sealed by me as presiding Bishop of the church, I feel myself called upon to disclaim any responsibility for the violation of the rubrics on that occasion and the introduction of vestments having no authority of use in the church."

Rev. J. L. McLaughlin writes to Dr. A. H. Briggs of San Francisco that, although he has been in Manila only six months, he has had 700 probationers, an aggregate attendance of about 3,000 at his 18 weekly meetings and is sorely handicapped by not having literature, money nor anything.

Bishop Montgomery addressed a Methodist audience at a university gathering recently. The Los Angeles Independent says: "The Roman Catholic Bishop did not hedge, but came square out in a most refreshing manner on the 'Cause of Church Disagreements.'"

Bishop Kelley of Geraldton, Australia, has charge of a diocese that has an area of about 1,200,000 square miles—nearly forty times as large as Ireland. It is said to be the largest diocese in the world in the matter of territory, but not in population.

MASTER OF YOURSELF.

"He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city."—Proverbs xvi:32.

In order to capture a city several things are necessary. The general must be conscious of the fact that the victory will be worth the struggle; he must have confidence in his men, their endurance and courage, and he must be so determined to succeed that he would rather die than fail. Under such conditions he will be sure to hold his flag on the conquered walls.

There is, however, a larger and a more honorable task than even this. The surrender of a city brings renown to a small number whose names are set with gems in the coronet of history. The surrender of the wild passions, the fierce and all consuming ambitions, the unbridled selfishness of human nature to that moral principle, that noble purpose, that high and holy aim which is consecrated by the baptism of God's approval, brings something far better than renown, namely, peace, content, self-respect, the consciousness of integrity, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail, and the name of the victor is written in the Book of Life.

If the captain of a vessel has no port which he hopes to reach he is the victim of circumstance. Wind and storm and wave are his masters. The pole star shines in vain, and his compass is an unheeded guide. He drifts, forever drifts, and comes to anchor—never. But with eye on compass and star, with a chart on which to mark his progress, and above all, a stout heart to achieve, he faces all contingencies, and though weather beaten and bruised, he safely reaches his destination at last.

So a soul that neither knows why it is here nor whither it is going, which is not near enough to God to hear the warning or the guiding voice, which has no religion for encouragement and good cheer, takes little satisfaction in life and dreads the approach of death. With nothing to do in the present except to pass the time as pleasantly as possible, and nothing to hope for in the future, existence is not a boon to be highly prized.

The first necessity, then, of your spiritual career is the conviction that you are not an accident, but a part of the great plan. The next necessity is such perfect mastery of yourself that you can make the best of the worst, and find in every incident, whether it be a laugh or a sob, a new rung in the ladder on which you climb out of darkness into light.

If you would do well, begin by a victory over yourself. Curb your passions, bridle your untamed thoughts, live with an object constantly in view, keep yourself well under control, like the man who has his hand on the tiller and guides his craft. The truly religious life is a calm life, a life of charity, of judgment, a kindly life and a life of good will toward all.

We spend too much time in fretting, as though God had given the responsibility into unskilled hands. If what you anticipate of ill can be avoided, then avoid it; but if this is impossible, then face it and use it for your soul's benefit. There is nothing which will not contribute to the strength and breadth of your character if you are wise enough to master it.

We lose half the joys that lie in our path by our ill temper; we are easily disturbed when our pulse should be perfect; we are irritated by a word, a look, an unintended affront; and, behold, the sun creeps behind a cloud, and the whole day is spoiled. Instead of meeting ill temper with good nature, and so rendering it innocuous, we add to it ill temper of our own, and the very heavens become lurid. The blood in our veins is poisoned by our bad mood, and aches and pains, miser of body and mental and spiritual wretchedness are the result.

Life is worth too much to be spent in this way. Like a thoughtless child we put the watch in the water to see if it will float, and it keeps time no more. To have your hatred impulsively stirred, to lose your temper and say more than you mean, is to trifle with the holiest relations and to break the bonds of friendship, which ought to be helpful and uplifting. Self-control, a good word given in exchange for a bad one, a quiet rejoinder to a hasty accusation, these are the foundations on which happiness and usefulness securely rest. If you are master of yourself you will generally be master of any situation in which you may be placed.

Moreover, this is the kind of practical religion of which the world stands most in need. It is not enough to believe that truth and call it your creed, for you should live the truth, and that truth is love. The whole gist of the Gospels may be put into a single sentence, namely: "Avoid all ill temper, be always kind and cheerful, too great to stoop to mean word or deed." Your path will thus be smoothed, and instead of thorns you will find flowers, for good will expressed in loving words and generous acts is godlike. Heaven is not far away if you love your neighbor as yourself. George H. Hepworth in New York Herald.
